Humor

Introduction

Humor can do much to enhance the classroom environment, reduce stress, increase student interest and attentiveness, and even promote long-term recall. The articles and websites below offer research, guidelines, and examples of humor in the college classroom, online courses, and "dread courses" such as statistics. The final two sites provide information on a society for humor studies and a source for college humor.

General Resources

http://www.radicalpedagogy.org/ [1]

"Bringing Life to Online Instruction with Humor," Mark A. Shatz and Frank M. LoSchiavo, Ohio University-Zanesville. Radical Pedagogy, Vol. 8, No. 2, Summer 2006. Explains ways in which humor can be added to online courses and offers guidelines for selecting appropriate humor for achieving instructional objectives. Discusses resources for locating pedagogical humor online, writing it yourself, and using it in the course.
http://www.radicalpedagogy.org/ [1]

"Learning Through Laughter: New Study Supports Use of Humor in Online Courses," Association for Psychological Science News Release, June 8, 2005. Reviews a research study by Mark Shatz and Frank LoSciaovo that found the use of humor in an online course boosted student enjoyment and participation in discussion boards.

"Using Humor in the College Classroom to Enhance Teaching Effectiveness in 'Dread Courses'," Neelam Kher,

The International Society for Humor Studies (ISHS) is "dedicated to the advancement of humor research." Their website is rich with materials and resources although many of them are password protected for Society members only. Provides links to numerous scholarly societies, research centers, and archives focused on the study and application of humor research. http://www.humorstudies.org/ [6]

College Humor. Links to dozens of jokes, essays, and funny scenarios about college life as a student or professor. http://digitalbasement.blogspot.com/search/label/college%20humor [7]

Back to top

These resources were compiled and annotated by Lois Rosen, Ph.D., Instructional Consultant for the Office of Faculty and Organizational Development, Michigan State University.

Source URL: http://fod.msu.edu/oir/humor

Links