Anne–Lise Halvorsen is an assistant professor of teacher education specializing in social studies education. Her scholarship includes research on the history of education, social studies at the elementary level, curriculum policy, the integration of social studies and other subject areas, and early childhood education. Currently, she is doing work on the history of elementary social studies, the relationship between social studies instruction and student learning, and teacher knowledge and preparation in the social studies.