The University has recently adopted high standards for accessibility that will ensure all faculty, staff, and students can access the knowledge, experiences, and opportunities here at MSU. But what does that mean for professors? What are the expectations for the curriculum you develop? What resources are available to you? What features of D2L enhance the creation of accessible courses? What is the timeframe for implementing the policy? The task of becoming accessible can seem daunting...unless you have a community of practice.

Come join this Faculty Learning Community (FLC) and work with other professors/instructors/staff dedicated to creating and revising materials that can be used by everyone. The focus of this FLC will be on Universal Design (UD) of which accessibility is one of the main components. Your participation in the FLC will help bring you up to date on the current state of UD on campus, connect you to literature on the topic, and provide you some skills in creating accessible materials. One of the best aspects of this FLC is that we will be working with IT Services to help identify the resources faculty and staff will need campus-wide. So, come have a voice in accessibility support while you learn with your peers and build a network that will help support you in creating accessible experiences.
